HARVARD UNDERGRADUATE INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS SCHOLARS PROGRAM

HOSTED BY THE HARVARD
UNDERGRADUATE FOREIGN POLICY INITIATIVE [HUFPI]

FOREWORD

Represented at this program are three generations:

Leaders of the past. This generation built the very foundations of the modern international system, ushered in an incipient world order, and ultimately allowed successive generations to live in unprecedented peace and prosperity. From their vast archives of wisdom, they retain an unabiding optimism forged by decades of selfless service that their structures will endure, yet remain confident enough in the faculty of their successors that the world they created will be maintained.

Leaders of the present. This generation inherited a world order in transition. To renew and to reinvigorate what their predecessors had begun necessitates a different form of courage—one that recognizes the fragility of what is too often understood as permanent. To preserve the peace amid change rather than create order amid chaos requires the ability to excite others to persist in the construction of what may no longer be apparent.

Leaders of the future. This generation stands before a world changing faster than ever. Facing challenges suited to our own time—some without precedent—we are aware of both the challenges and opportunities that await. We are also mindful, however, that moments of crisis are of immense value. They present the favorable circumstances in which to deploy imagination in delivering change ordinarily far more difficult in times of peace.

Past, present, and future—the youngest among them have now brought these three generations together. We look to the two before our own to strengthen our courage, develop our character, and nurture our minds. Each generation carries with them the responsibility to cultivate the next, but such a process does not happen without proactive initiative and the relentless efforts of all to create what does not currently exist. Seeing what was lacking, we assembled a team and forged ahead into the unknown.

Within four months, we have established what we believe to be an extraordinary four-day program bringing together an inaugural class of 615 exceptional student leaders from 62 countries and more than 100 distinguished guests and experts spread across seven world regions. To our knowledge, this program is already the largest of its kind. But we alone can only do so much. We hope our example propels other students to form cross-generational bonds of their own at the same time that we aspire to continuously evolve our program into the world's leading forum for young leaders in foreign policy.

We are immensely grateful to all of the distinguished experts who have graciously volunteered their time, our participating students who have placed their trust in us, and my outstanding team whose dedication produced a program equal to the standard set by all those experts and students in attendance. I am also indebted to Ms. Sama Kubba for being my indispensable partner and friend in turning this vision into reality through her inexhaustible energy and unmatched devotion to our enterprise.

As much as this program might achieve, we are relentless to do more. Our ultimate ambition is not to bring leaders together for its own sake, but to play a significant role in global affairs by actively generating original ideas with imagination, shared by all three generations.

To achieve this, we are rapidly expanding at home in the United States and abroad, seeking collaborations with students at other top universities around the world who share our vision. We are hopeful that the first of these collaborations will be with our fellow students at Tsinghua University in Beijing, China next year in commemoration of the 50th anniversary of U.S.-China rapprochement. We envision the drafting of a bilateral youth communiqué, articulating proposals to our two respective governments on major global challenges, and establishing an enduring channel of U.S.-China collegiate dialogue between each nation's future decision-makers.

In the decades ahead, if any future global leaders happen to have been alumni of this program—we will have achieved what we set out to do. With time, the relationships formed here could grow into an invaluable network for international cooperation. Climate change is perhaps the one issue that most demonstrates our desperate need for unity, but certainly not the only one; the pandemic was a tragic wake-up call, urgently exposing our vulnerabilities as a world.

This program will remain but one modest contribution toward the eventual solution, and our mission is what matters. Thank you for joining us on this journey and let us honor the past, cherish the present, and work together to build an ever-brighter future.

ABOUT THE PROGRAM

WHAT IS THIS CONFERENCE? The Harvard Undergraduate International Relations Scholars Program is an undergraduate-run conference from June 16th to 19th for high school students looking to pursue a career in foreign policy. Featuring a range of professionals and academics, this equal-opportunity conference aims to reach students all across the world, of different nationalities, socioeconomic classes, and lived experiences. This program seeks to expose high schoolers to current foreign policy questions with prominent leaders in the field. Programming will consist of discussions with professors, experienced policymakers, government officials, and regional experts. Students will have the opportunity to learn real-world policy writing skills, cross-cultural leadership, and how to address global challenges from all sectors of international relations.

WHAT IS THE PURPOSE OF THE CONFERENCE? When we (HUFPI members) were high school students, we were frustrated that there wasn't much to accommodate our interests in foreign policy, specifically in relation to diplomacy, defense, development and intelligence. This conference is our way of meeting the interests of high school students in foreign policy and introduce them to the wide range of careers and academic opportunities possible. We hope to inspire the next generation of foreign policy leaders in diplomacy, defense, development, and intelligence.

WHAT DO THE FUNDS GENERATED FROM THIS CONFERENCE SUPPORT? First and foremost, program fees are allocated for the costs associated with running the conference. Besides immediate costs from the conference, as a nonprofit, additional revenue generated from this conference is poured back into educational endeavors for our organization. Overall, in addition to covering the costs of the high school conference, revenue generated from this conference supports the educational mission of HUFPI by allowing our organization to continue to engage in impactful research and dialogue with domestic and international mentors and peers.

HOW IS THIS CONFERENCE STRUCTURED? The conference is from late evening June 16th to early evening June 19th. We expect you to attend all planned activities including your regional workshops, keynotes, presentations, trivia, and lunch roundtables. Programming is scheduled in U.S. Eastern Time Zone (ET) because we have structured this conference around experts mainly located in Washington D.C.; we apologize for any inconveniences caused by the online nature of our program.

Students are divided according to the regional group they selected in the application and will be exposed to a variety of topics within their regional room. Some regions have two different groups due to high demand with different sets of speakers. Regional workshops are 50 minutes long and are structured differently depending on the preference of the speaker(s). There will be a 10 minute grace period between speakers to allow for exiting and entry as speakers transition. You are expected to stay in your regional session throughout the sessions and even during the 10 minute transitions, unless you are attending a lunch roundtable or going to a main session event for a keynote speech, conference-wide workshop or panel event. In addition, some students will be chosen for a one-on-one with experts during this 10 minute transitional period to interview the speaker for a videotaped testimonial on youth engagement in foreign policy.

The evening of June 16th will be an "opening" to the conference. Informational sessions will take up all of Day 1 (17th) and half of Day 2 (18th). The second half of Day 2 (18th) and Day 3 (19th) will be devoted to the policy hackathon, in addition to other programming such as keynotes and panels. Students will be divided into their policy hackathon teams within each of their regional rooms and present their policy hackathon findings to their group. Winners of each region will present to the entire conference.

WHAT IS THE POLICY HACKATHON? A policy hackathon is a compressed window of time where you and the members of your team will put your heads together to come up with innovative policy solutions to a theoretical foreign policy crisis. We'll throw a scenario at you and you will come up with two things: #1—Draft something called a policy memo, which is a short document that briefly analyzes the situation and gives your policy recommendations and #2—Come up with a presentation to showcase to your regional groups for judging and potentially to the entire conference that lays out your policy recommendations. You can be as creative as you want with the policies and presentation style in delivering your recommendations.

The second half of Day 2 and all of Day 3 will be spent on the policy hackathon. Each region will receive a different scenario. You will be given several working sessions and will first present to your regional groups. Winners at the regional group level will then go on to present to the entire conference and will compete to be the final winners. The situations for each region, accompanying readings lists and policy memo instructions will be provided at the conference.

HOW CAN STUDENTS MAKE THE MOST OF THIS CONFERENCE? Show up! And we don't just mean show up to the zoom sessions, we mean be an active listener and participate. These experts work IN the fields you want to enter, so impress them! Show them you're someone who should intern or work for them in the next couple of years when you're in college. Also, and this is a big one, take advantage of the office hours, lunch roundtables, and extra activities we're putting together. We're trying to create opportunities for you all to have more intimate conversations with these professionals for advice and candid conversations. Some of the best advice we have ever received was in office hours or lunch roundtable sessions. Don't waste those unique opportunities.

WHO DO I CONTACT IF I NEED HELP/HAVE QUESTIONS? On the schedule, each region will have one Harvard undergraduate from our team who will be serving as your room moderator. If you have technical difficulties or questions pertaining to your region, contact the people listed on your region's schedule. You can reach out to our team email with any questions (info@harvardforeignpolicy.org). If you have a question pertaining to the logistics of the conference or any problems or concerns arise regarding programming or interactions with peers or experts, contact our Conference Director, Lexa Brenner (alexabrenner@college.harvard.edu).

CODE OF CONDUCT: For the duration of the program, students are expected to be courteous and appropriate in discussions with both peers and speakers. We expect professional behavior at all times when interacting with experts. Be respectful of their time by asking questions, engaging with content, etc. Please remember that these experts are taking time out of their very busy schedules to speak at this event. Show experts that you appreciate their efforts by demonstrating interest. The expected dress code is "business casual: professional and appropriate".

PLEASE NOTE: Anything said by experts in the workshops is OFF THE RECORD. This means that you cannot record or share what experts say at the conference. This includes posting on social media or other public platforms. The privacy of our experts is fundamental to our operations. Failure to adhere to this rule may result in expulsion from the conference.

No form of discrimination or harassment will be tolerated. This can include, but is not limited to racial, ethnic, sexual, or socioeconomic discrimination and harassment. Please report any occurrence of this kind of behavior or direct any questions about our code of conduct to Conference Director Lexa Brenner at alexabrenner@college.harvard.edu. Violation of these guidelines may result in dismissal from the program. Students who are dismissed for inappropriate behavior will not be issued a program fee refund.

ABOUT HUFPI

MISSION The Harvard Undergraduate Foreign Policy Initiative is a student-led organization that aspires to be the world's most influential platform for youth in foreign policy. Our goal is to one day play a significant role in global affairs by building networks of past, present, and future foreign policy leaders around the world. This organization is led by and in service of diverse students—by creating new opportunities for those of all backgrounds to engage with professionals in foreign policy entities. Inclusion is a cornerstone of the organization because it inspires impact—by inviting in a variety of perspectives and experiences—this organization channels synergy created by cooperation to make a real change in this world. We were originally established as an organization for Harvard undergraduates, but now we aim to be the leading forum for all young people in world affairs.

POLICY PROJECTS Each semester, we partner with U.S. government entities, foreign governments, non-profits, businesses, and think tanks to conduct policy research under the guidance of mentors. Partners from Spring 2021 include the U.S. National Security Council, U.S. Department of State, United Nations, Facebook, and foreign governments on every continent. Our aim is to connect aspiring foreign policy students with mentors in order to create an educational professional experience for younger generations and provide experts with a youth perspective. Students aim to contribute meaningfully to the recent and most pressing work of foreign policy leaders worldwide in hopes of providing creative solutions and new insights. Thanks to our partners and incredible members, our program has quickly become Harvard's largest undergraduate-led research program with plans to continue expanding our policy program."

CONFERENCES AT HARVARD AND ABROAD We don't organize conferences for its own sake, but aspire, rather, to move beyond discussion and mobilize the energies and skills of past, present, and future leaders to achieve real impact in the world. To this end, we recognize the critical importance of partnering with other top collegiate students in the United States and globally who share our ambitious vision. We intend to build two annual conferences at Harvard and abroad for this very purpose—to put forward youth-initiated proposals to the governments of the world while establishing enduring channels of dialogue among the world's future decision-makers. Thus, we are hopeful that the first conference abroad will be in Beijing, China through a collaboration with our fellow students at Tsinghua University for the 50th anniversary of U.S.-China rapprochement. Past generations witnessed what we now call history, present generations are adapting their statecraft to a new world, and the youngest of these generations are currently tasked with carrying such teachings forward. It is only through the engagement of these three generations—especially our fellow students around the world—that we can take on the challenges of the world with enough ambition to believe we are up to the task, but with enough humility to understand we cannot do it alone.

MEET THE HUFPI CONFERENCE STAFF

President

JOHN FERGUSON senior at Harvard, will complete his BA and MA within four years in May 2022. He heads the Harvard Undergraduate Foreign Policy Initiative (HUFPI), leading the team to build a trio of annual conferences online, at home, and abroad all for the first time. Earlier as Founding Director, he established what is now Harvard's largest undergraduate-led research program. John aspires to pioneer U.S.-China techno-diplomacy—leveraging comparative advantages through diplomacy—to address global challenges together (space, climate, AI, biotech, and internet). His BA and MA theses apply techno-diplomacy to U.S.-China climate negotiations, advised by Graham Allison and Ambassador Nicholas Burns. John is half-Chinese and half-American (biracial and bilingual).

Vice President and Senior Director of Policy for U.S. Government

SAMA KUBBA is the Vice President of HUFPI and the initiator of the Harvard International Relations Scholars Program.
